

Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies

LILIANA ANDONOVA

MENTOR.COMMITTED.KNOWLEDGEABLE

Liliana Andonova is Professor of Political Science and International Relations, and Academic Co-Director of the Center for International Environmental Studies at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Geneva. Through teaching and collaborative research, she has supported the professional advancement of many talented young women, who have become leaders and advocates for the environment and sustainable development in academia, policy work, and international relations. She has been named Giorgio Ruffolo Fellow in Sustainability Science at Harvard University and Senior Fernand Braudel Fellow at the European University Institute. Her research focuses on international institutions, transnational governance, and environmental cooperation, in an effort to chart new pathways to addressing complex issues of sustainability.

#GENDER4Envt #IWD2017

a network supported by the Schweizerische Eidgenossenschaft
Confédération suisse
Confederazione Svizzera
Confederaziun svizra

